on the Narcotics problem and exploring in some depth the inner relationships between CIA and DEA, both in Headquarters and the field. He also probed for the rationale behind CIA's involvement in the foreign collection of Narcotics information and seemed to be satisfied with the response that DEA and CIA collaborate extensively and that CIA is doing work which DEA is precluded by charter from performing. (b) Chairman Aspin asked several questions and after hearing the responses summed up CIA's activity by saying "CIA gathers intelligence and then turns it over to someone else who can do something about it. If no subsequent action is taken then CIA might try to help it along via covert action means and then check up on what has been done." [] indicated that this was a fair resume of CIA's role in the Narcotics field. Chairman Aspin closed his questioning by probing into the degree to which the Narcotics problem is or is not growing and whether CIA's and the U.S. Government's efforts have been and are being effective. Chairman Aspin concluded with the observation that working with the host governments either via CIA or DEA is probably the major means by which the Narcotics problem can be controlled.
